Delivered at the Memorial Services Here.

BEAUTIFUL TRIBUTE TO LATE PRESIDENT

The following is the full text of the ad dress delivered by Rev. Dr. T. S. Duna way at the memorial services held in this city, in St. George's church, last Thurs day. The address was listened to with great interest by an immense audience and was complimented in the highest terms by all who heard it:

Mr. President, Friends and Fellow

We are assembled and engaged in these demn memorial services not so much it bedience to the Presidept's proclamation as in response to the spontaneiou promptings and impulses of our own people, for this meeting had been arranged for, except as to time, before the issuance of that proclamation. This spontaniety of impulse and purpose is an honor to our people. A strange and deeply afflictive provi dence has brought us together as sharers

n a common sorrow and suffering. To day a great nation mourns by the bier of a good and great man. Our able, wise and popular Chief Magistrate has been stricken down by the veiled hand of a dastardly and brutal assassin. The gen erous and kind heart has ceased to throb the skilful hand is powerless to protect our trusted leader is absent in the mount the wise counsellor is silent, and the func of wisdom heretofore at the disposal of his countrymen is locked up in the silent chamber of the dead. In consequence a leep gloom has settled on the nation as a pall, and all the people of all politica parties and all sections of our broad country have their deepest sorrows and profoundest sympathies stirred by the sudden and cruel death of the man and ruler who has done more than any other since the Civil war to allay sectiona strife and unite all the people of all sec tions in fraternal feeling. His death has cast a dark shadow over every heart and home in the land. The deadly bullet that penetrated his body pierced the heart not only of every true American citizen but of every lover of law, liberty and virtue throughout the civilized world. All alike are mourners by the bier of our dead President today. A cablegram from Lon don states that arrangements have been made to hold memorial services in most of the British cathedrals and churches today, as well as in a majority of the Continental and Colonial capitals. Em perors, kings, presidents, governors, legislative assemblies and other public bod ies throughout the civilized world continue to express their sorrow, their high respect and great admiration for the exalted character of the illustrious patriot and statesman whose untimely death is so universally deplored and whose body is laid to rest today in the city and State he loved so much and served so faithfully. lie is all the more poignant and our sense of loss all the greater because his death as a man, but as a ruler-not because of any hatred to him personally, but bethat the sufferings he bore so patiently and the death he met so heroically were

Our grief as citizens of this great repub was vicarious. He suffered and died on Columbus, he kept up the same habit by our account. The fatal bullet was not fired at him, by the fiendish anarchist, he had been called by the free suffrages of the American people. Is it not true, then, vicarious and in our behalf? While it is fitting that we pay a just tribute to the worth and memory of our Chief Magistrate on this memorial occasion, yet, I suppose that is not the chief aim or ultimate purpose of these services. Nothing which we could do or say today could add to or take from the immortal name and fame of William McKinley. These are secure beyond all peradventure, the register of the immortals.

Had I the disposition or ability to deliver a highwrought enlogy or panegyric on the life and death of our loved President, I should feel that this was not the time or place for it. The occasion is too mournful, the grief of the people too fresh, and the sense of their loss too pro found for any such performance. How well do the words of the great English poet express our feelings at this hour?

torian to record his name and deeds in

"Our grief lies all within, And these external manners of laments are merely shadows of the unseen grie which become the occasion I would speak of the virtues, life, death and deeds of our late Chief Executive, I do so not so much to calogize the dead, as to inspire and benefit the living. I would put before you a hasty and imperiest sketch of his stainless life and character that there might be kindled afresh on the al tars of our hearts the fires of patriotism and that our young menespecially might be inspired with a high ambition to imi tate his noble example and fill all the stations in life, whether high or low, private or public, with the same fidelity and integrity which marked his whole career. A noble life like that of Maj. Mc-Kinley put fairly before the people acts as a stimulus and an inspiration to the iving. It shows what a man may be what human life is capable of being as new strength, courage and faith-faith in ourselves and in others. Whatever relates to such men as have made their mark in the world's history-their perconslity, their habits, modes of living, their virtues and their deeds-is for u full of interest instruction and encourage ment. It stimulates our aspirations and incites us to become co-partners with them in noble deeds. In attempting to portray such a life ried sketch of a wide landscape; he can only present it in outline with a few touches which suggest its salient points, rather than depict them. There is no time for filling in or for minute delineation. If he cannot produce a completed picture, he must content himself with a To swerve from truth, or change his cartoon. So in attempting to portray before you the life and character of a man of such tinction so many places of honor, trust, power and responsibility, I can only touch on some of the most salient points in his wonderful career. It would be him somewhat at length, as a son and husband, a citizen and soldier, a lawyer and legislator a governor of a great State. Chief Executive of a great nation, and last, but not least, as a loyal subject of Zion's King-a Christian.

1. His private and domestic life was stainless and beautiful. As a son he was dutiful and obedient. His devotion to his aged mother was the crowning excellence in his character. No cares of State or honors of position, diminished his attention, or lessened his devotion to his mother so long as she lived. We are told, when he lived in Canton, it was his habit and his will be done, not mine." to accompany his aged mother to church he became governor of Ohio and lived in leaving Columbus Sunday morning, go ing to Canton for that purpose, and returning home that evening. What a beautiful example of filial loyalty and devotion. And it is also said that when he became President, so long as his that he did not either write to her or send her a message to let her know how they should be gathered up and utilized. things were going with him.

2. As we might expect, such an ideal son made a model husband. His conduct and bearing toward his invalid wife, through so many years, was praiseworthy beyond the power of words to allow. express, and showed the nobility and tenderness of his nature. His last conscious moments in the struggle with death were spent in words of tenderness comfort and encouragement to his griefstricken wife.

3. As a soldier he was brave, chivalrou and faithful, whether in the camp or on the field of battle. As a youth he entered the army when the Civil war broke out and served to its close. At the battle at as the bloodiest day of the war, 17th Sept., 1862, for gallant conduct his commander recommended his promotion. Step by step he rose, until he was brevetted major for meritorious services, in the bat tles of Opequan, Cedar Creek and Fisher's Hill. By learning to obey as a soldier, he was fitted to become the commander in-chief of the Army and Navy of the U S. But at no time and no place did he display more true courage than at the stones to future distinction.

Divine Lord, etc. And all during his weeks of suffering he showed the sublimst courage and heroism. Not one de pondent complaining, retaliatory word scaped his lips.

4. At the close of the war he studied law, and began its practice at Canton. In his chosen profession he was indus trious, faithful, high-minded, and soo took high rank at the bar as an able jurist and eloquent advocate

As a legislator and debator he soon Daniel Webster, after his wonderful politrose to distinction and was made chair- ical career, said near its close: "If I had man of the Committee of Ways and to live my life over again, with my pre Means, and the acknowledged leader of sent experience, I would not under any his party in the House. In that capacity he became the author and framer of the public life." famous law known as the McKinley Tariff Bill.

6. In 1891 he was elected governor of Ohio, and was re-elected in 1893.

7. His distinguished services in Congress and in the gubernatorial chair placed him before the country and his God but let politics alone and do not enparty as one of the foremost citizens, patriots and statesmen of the land, and While in the subdued temper and tones he was nominated for President on the first ballot by the Republican convention which met at St. Louis, in 1896. He was elected and took his seat in March and ought to be contented and happy.

His able faithful and clean administration of the affairs of the government secured for him a second nomination and election. And a nation is draped in mourning today because he could not live to fill out his full term. While the country is full of politicians and partisans, we have but few men with such broad and enlightened views of the science of government-such political wisdom and patriotism, as entitle them to be recognized as statesmen. Concensus of public opinion in this and other countries is that Wm. McKinley was both a and do when at his best. It exhibits patriot and a statesman. His administrations were able and patriotic, and his made. It quickens our hopes and gives public life, like his private character, was without blemish or reproach. No wonder that the death of such a man should be regarded as a national calamity But the crowning glory in the unique character of Maj. McKinley was his simple, child-like unfaltering trust in God. He was a Christian-a true disciple of him who came not to be ministered unto but to minister. While a mere youth he professed faith in Christ and united with the Methodist church, and to the day of and character, "I can only do as the his death led an exemplary Christian life. In this respect, as well as in others, how like our own immortal Ro. E. Lee and varied gifts, one who has filled with disgenuineness of his religion was shown in his last trying hours in the struggle with death. I have been touched and impressed as I have thought of the similarity beprofitable if we had the time to speak of tween his death and that of another good and great man, Dwight L. Moody. After a brave fight for life for days during, which time life had been simply pro. longed by strong heart tonic, Moody said to his physicians: "Dr., let me go, I see the earth receding, the heavens opening and God is calling, let me go. And so only a few hours before Mr. Mc-Kinley's death, when perfectly himself, he asked to see his wife, and as she entered his room, he smiled and began and then bidding her and all about him "goodbye," said, "This is God's way, Since God has said, "The righteous shall and see her back safely home. And when be in everlasting remembrance" the name and fame of our late lamented President will go down to the remotest generations as a dutiful son, a tender and faithful husband, an upright citizen, a brave soldier, a wise legislator, an able jurist, a benevolent ruler, a true patriot, a real statesman, and an exemplary Christian. The practical lessons to be gathered mother lived, he scarcely passed a day from the unique life and tragic death of Major McKinley are so important that McKinley's early advantages were slender. He did not receive a collegiate training. He was educated in the village school at Niles, and in an academy at Poland. True, at the age of 16, he entered Alleghany College, Pa., but had to leave immediately thereafter on account of illness, and never returned. At the age of 17 he taught a district school at a salary of $25 per month, and thus aided his father, who had failed in busi-Antietam, on what Gen. Hayes described ness, in taking care of his family. Step by step he rose higher and higher, and at his death was the foremost citizen of an enlightened nation of 75,000,000 of people. GOLDENBOD WEDDING

Heizer-Mann Nuptials

On Wednesday afternoon, Sept. 18, Rhoadesville church, Orange county, presented a beautiful scene as Mr. Roy Heizer led to the altar Miss Julia Gordon Mann At half-past four the bridal party en tered the church to the strains of Mendels sohn's Wedding March, rendered by the skilful touch of Mrs. P. H. Faulconer. The ushers were Messrs. W. E. Wright and Charlie Clark. The bride came in on the arm of her father and was met at the altar by the groom, accompanied by his best man, Mr. Compton, of Washington The maid of honor, Miss Frances Waugh looked lovely in a gown of heliotrope broadcloth, trimmed in applique and velvet. She carried a large bunch of American Beauties, and as she walked slowly up the aisles we thought that, with the exception of the bride, we had never seen one so beautiful.

The bride was attired in a handsome suit of cadet-blue cloth, trimmed in white applique and silk, and wore a white hat and gloves. She carried a shower bouquet of Brides' roses. As she passed down the aisle with her usual sweet smile we thought: "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." She is loved by all who know her, and the wish for long life and joy through it all finds an echo in a thousand bearts. The groom is a well-known business man of Washington.
